The Illusion of Western Control: How Israel Grips the World by the Throat

> In a recent, unfiltered analysis of current geopolitical dynamics – following conversations between Nima Alkorshid, Paul Craig Roberts, and Stanislav Krapivnik – a revealing picture emerges of the Middle East and its relationship with the West. While Western government leaders and media indulge in diplomatic maneuvers, a ruthless strategic reality unfolds in the background. The core of this reality is undeniable: Israel is the only actor in the region with a long-term agenda, the West has been taken in a stranglehold by this state, and the Western press completely fails to see through these power structures.

The Zionist Agenda for 'Greater Israel': Two Steps Forward, One Back

The fundamental mistake of the Western and Arab world is the assumption that Israel is willing to compromise. The facts show otherwise. The Zionist agenda for a 'Greater Israel' has been in the making for over a century, dating back to the ideas of Theodor Herzl, and knows only one direction: forward. The tactic employed is as simple as it is effective: two steps forward, one step back, but always continuing.

The pattern is historically consistent. One occupies a village or piece of land, the international community cries murder, after which the expansion is temporarily paused to calm tempers. Then the next piece of land is annexed. In this way, Palestine has been almost completely absorbed over the course of 79 years. Today, 70% of Gaza has been incorporated, with the unmasked promise that it will become 100%. The settlements in the West Bank are not dismantled, but swallowed up.

This expansionist drive does not stop at historical borders. Senior Israeli officials, including the war minister, make it openly clear that Lebanon is an integral part of 'Greater Israel'. The same claim is laid on parts of Syria, where they systematically refuse to withdraw. What we are currently seeing in Lebanon is not 'defensive warfare', as the West is led to believe, but the next phase of a predetermined annexation plan. Even within the religious extremist wings (such as certain Chabad factions), insane maps circulate for a 'Greater Khazaria', which should include the Caucasus and Southern Russia. This is not a psychological haze, but the ideological driving force of those who call the shots. As long as Israel is the only party with an unwavering, eternal agenda, and opponents (such as Iran) merely react instead of employing their own winning strategy, this advance will inevitably be successful.

The West Taken by the Throat: The Parasitic State

The relationship between the United States and Israel can long no longer be called an alliance; it is a relationship of hostage-taking. As aptly noted in the analysis, Israel is a 'parasitic state' shifted from the skin of the American host directly to the heart. Israel has the West, and the US in particular, firmly by the throat.

This is evident from the unprecedented integration of American and Israeli military and intelligence services. There is no longer any question of independent American interests; Israel's affairs have become ours, and vice versa. American politics is 'bought and paid for'. It is a gigantic money laundering system: the American taxpayer who sends billions of dollars to Israel and which flows back via detours directly to Washington as campaign donations to maintain their own politicians. The military-industrial complexes and Zionist lobbies together form a block that completely ignores the American voter.

This stranglehold reaches into the capillaries of Western society. Israeli lobbies dictate legislation at the level of individual American states, such as Texas and Florida, where criticizing Israel or participating in a boycott can lead to the loss of government contracts. Even the tenure process at Catholic universities is controlled. No other foreign power possesses this power.

The only thing that can break this grip is the inevitable collapse of the Western economy under the burden of this endless financial and military drain, but in the meantime Tel Aviv dictates the terms.

The Completely Ignorant Western Press Apparatus

> What makes this geopolitical transformation possible is the total blindness of the Western media. The press is not merely biased; it is completely ignorant and functions as a conduit for the Zionist narrative. When there was recently talk of a 'Memorandum of Understanding' (MOU) between the US and Iran, the Western press headlined a 'historic peace agreement'. The reality, as sharply pointed out, was that it was merely an agreement to talk for 60 days. There was no peace, no cessation of Israeli aggression in Lebanon, and thus in fact no binding agreement whatsoever. The press did not understand the difference between a real agreement and a postponement manifesto.

The same press is completely silent about the merging of American and Israeli armed forces, because this goes against the interests of the conglomerates that finance the media companies. Western journalism accepts without any criticism the lie that Israel invades Lebanon out of 'self-defense', when it is clearly about offensive territorial expansion.

The historical parallel is eerie and telling. Just as the Western world and business in the 1930s read Mein Kampf as the fantasizing ravings of a madman, and refused to see that it was a literal script for the Second World War, so the Western press today ignores the open declarations of Israeli ministers. The map of 'Greater Israel', from the Nile to the Euphrates, or even further, lies openly on the table.

The Western press refuses to read what is in it. They accept the illusion of a 'two-state solution' that has been used for 79 years as a smokescreen for the actual eradication of the Palestinian presence.

Conclusion: A Lack of Leadership

> The tragedy of the current geopolitical situation – whether we look at the Middle East or the impasse in Eastern Europe – is the complete bankruptcy of Western and global leadership. Leaders without an agenda, who are governed by short-term interests, oligarchic profit-seeking, or the fear of not disturbing 'relations with the West', are hopeless against a movement that is prepared to wait centuries for the fulfillment of its ideological goals.
> As long as the West is not willing to face reality, that Israel has an unstoppable expansionist agenda, that Western sovereignty has been eroded by foreign interests, and that its own press functions as a shield of ignorance, history will continue to repeat itself. The parasite will continue to grow, unless the host ultimately succumbs to its own blindness.
